My LO can't seem to fall asleep at all. She is 3 months old, and normally she sleeps through the night from around 7-8. She just wants to be awake all night. She is rarely awake past 10-11. She's just not a good napper. I've tried putting her down between 9-10, and by 10-11 she will have woke up. She is not sleeping well in her crib either. She's super fussy during the day. I can put her down and she'll fall asleep for about 30 minutes to an hour, then she'll wake up and just wants to play. If I try and put her down and she wakes up (either she doesn't want to go down or she's crying) I have to rock her a few times and then she will fall back asleep. I have tried putting her down awake in her bed at 9-10, but it doesn't work. I'll hear her start to cry and I'll turn on my bedtime story and try to rock her to sleep, but no luck. I am almost to the point of not knowing how to take care of her anymore. She has never been this fussy and I feel like I'm not doing anything right. Comments (12) I think a good thing to try, when my little girl was only sleeping 1-2 naps a day, is to lay her down in her crib with no baby monitor. I tried it and for a few days she would sleep for two naps and then would wake up at night f3916c5595

Autodesk AutoCAD Exchange (AceF) Add and edit CAD file data to existing or new documents. Keep track of your progress through history log and project management tools. (video: 2:53 min.) What's new in AutoCAD 2019? Markup Import and Markup Assist: Import previous revisions into a new drawing and apply them as a base, using an "Import as Base" command. Use the tools to apply subsequent revisions from your drawing history without switching to the "Import Revisions as Base" toolset. Edit CAD data in drawings based on the properties of the embedded data, making it easier to make changes to your existing design. The updated "Edit CAD Data" command displays a large preview window of your CAD data. The "Insert Markup" command now groups selected object categories and features into a "Markup Group." Markups are no longer directly editable. They are turned into editable bookmarks. Read the latest release notes for more details about the most recent AutoCAD changes.
