Diaspora Search Search form Main menu New York State Lawmakers Introduce Legislation to Expand Social Security Disability to LGBT People The legislation would expand the definition of who is eligible for Social Security disability benefits. Currently, these benefits are only available to people who have work experience and have been deemed by an ALJ as unable to work due to a disability. Currently, there is no requirement that applicants prove they are unable to work due to any mental or physical disability. Only two states, California and Illinois, have extended social security disability benefits to LGBT applicants, and New York is the first state to propose legislation to do so. A statement from Senator Jeff Klein, Chair of the Senate Committee on Aging, said, "A change in the definition of disability is a critical component to improving the lives of New Yorkers with mental health and physical disabilities. The Committee on Aging strongly supports the creation of an inclusive definition of disability that will allow more people to receive the benefits they need to recover and thrive." New York State Assemblyman Richard Gottfried and City Council Member Corey Johnson added, "All New Yorkers deserve access to good, quality, and affordable health care, regardless of sexual orientation or gender identity. New York State and New York City have a unique opportunity to advance inclusion and equality by increasing access to disability benefits for people with mental health issues." Daniel Tauber, Senior Policy Analyst at Gay Men's Health Crisis, added, "While the Social Security Administration has made a number of improvements to eliminate bias in their decision-making process, currently, no legal protections exist against denial of disability benefits based on a person's sexual orientation or gender identity.
